Ben Alligin and Ben Dearg from Ardmore. One of the loveliest spots on Loch Torridon is the little bay of Ardmore, a favourite shelter for the herring boats which are here in harbour. The landscape is indescribably grand and the colouring quite wonderful. Between the two mountains a curious light can often be observed that seems to point out the way to Gairloch, lying due north. This brightness when reflected in the water, especially towards sunset on a December day, is glorious.
